A Hariford (Com.) special says: Useday W. W. Converse, president to Winchester Arms Company, a well reserved gentleman of fifty years, we sixty married to Miss Belle Spences this city, a lady of about the same. There is a romance connected this city, a lady of about the same. There is a romance connected the same of rerse to him, but told him plainly that marriage was then impossible, as she had made it her life they to remain with her mother, and as the oldest daughter to the her aid and counsel in keeping to-ether the fatherless family of a mother, sister, who was but a child, and a counger brother. William Spencer, her nole, commended her determination stained her in it. Young Compleaded without avail, and es quarrel ensued.

The heremoved to New Haven, mained a brief correspondence, and lly discontinued it. Mr. Converse at into the lumber business in New ren and made money. A few years and and he married a Miss Pardee, whose sister had married into the family of the Winchesters, interested in gun manufacture. Mr. Converse, on a visit to Hartford with his bride, alled at the residence of Miss Spencer and was received pleasantly. She had so words of blame to utter. She was oing her duty as she understood it, ad he had been free to pursue his own turse. The years rolled on, and Mr. Converse, a busy man, heard little from the Spencer family. Once the report reached him that Miss Belle was ad, and he heard no correction of it. Mrs. Spencer, during all this time, main-tained her little family by keeping boarders, and Miss Belle, now adancing in years, was her right and and her helper. Last November Mrs. Spencer died at the advanced age of seventy-eight. Miss Belle was left, out not alone, her younger sister having narried Mr. A. P. Brown, whose home was there. About three years ago Mr. Converse lost his wife by death, but it was not until the time of Mrs. Spencer's decease that he heard that Miss Belle was still living. He came to Hartford some weeks later and visited her, but she failed at first to recognize her love of thirty years ago. He heard her story, and the old love of his young manod was revived. During the winer he again asked for the hand which ad been refused him over a quarter of a century before. She accepted him, and the wedding-day was fixed. He was liberal with his gifts. Her trousseau is described by the few intimate lady friends who were permitted to see it as "perfectly elegant." They were it as "perfectly elegant." They were a handsome couple, it was said by the few who were invited to the ceremony. Only a few near relatives and friends were present. The presents were ele-gant, those of the groom to the bride especially. His income as presi-dent of the Arms Company is be about $12,000 annum. Among the gifts from Mr. Converse's friends in New Haven was friends in the New Haven Yacht Club, of which he is a member. He owns one of the finest yachts in the club. The couple left, after the wedding on a carriage trip, embracing the grand scenery of the Berkshire hills, never more beautiful than in June.

Brs. Gladstone and Mr. Forster.

[Society in London.]

Two years ago, when Mr. W. E. Forster had resigned his portfolio in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet, he was naturally anxious to hear how the Prime Minister would speak of the incident in the House of Commons, and not less anxious to listen without being himself observed. He, therefore, did not take his ordinary place in the body of that assemblage, but made his way into the ladies' cage, or rather that portion of it which is set apart for the lady friends of the wife of the Speaker. Directly he had entered he perceived that the sole occupant of the department was no less a person than Mrs. Gladstone herself. She was the one person whom he would have avoided seeing. He felt a little discomposed, and was proceeding to evince his discomposure in the rugged, spasmodic way peculiar to that flower of Quaker subtlety. But Mrs. Gladstone was perfectly at her ease. She held up her finger at him, and chaking her head with an air of gentle reproval, muttered in a low voice, "Nanghty! naughty!"

I have only once in my experience of Englishmen or English women heard anything at all comparable to this; that was when Lady Waldegrave—now, alas! dead—asked Lord Beaconsfield whether he intended to dissolve in the forthcoming autumn. "Perhaps," she said archly, "you have another surprise m store for us." The impassive Earl was allent for a moment. He then looked her ladyship straight in the face, and in a tone half oracular, half bantering, which I shall never forget, said, "Oh, you dear?"
